SHOOTING THROUGH SOLID STEEL.
The utility of piling steel armor plates on war vessels is being demonstrated at the new testing ground of the Cramps. There, at intervals of a few days, conical steel shells are fired through four inches of solid steel armor plate with as apparent ease as though the plates were the flimsiest cardboard.
The range is on the Lewis farm, above Wheatshole lane, along the Delaware river. The shells, which are three inches in diameter and 10 inches long, are forged from the finest hardened steel and fitted by the Cramps for use in the United States army and navy, and it is to test the quality of the steel in different lots that these experiments are being conducted.

A heavy abutment of railroad ties has been erected as a fender to hold a bank of earth, and in front of that is placed a heavy oak plank box, five feet square and 10 feet long, which is filled with sand.

Against another fender in front of this box is set up one of the armor plates, such as are used on the armored cruisers and battleships now being built. One hundred feet distant from the plate is the firing house—a plank building about 30 feet long by 10 feet wide and double lined to deaden sound.

Two 3-inch rapid-firing Driggs-Schroeder guns are used in the tests.
When everything is ready for firing a hazard is passed out of the back of the building and through an aperture in a pile of heavy spruce joists, the gun having previously been sighted.

When the gun is fired the wall of steel is pierced by the projectile, leaving only a fringe around the hole where the shot passes out on the opposite side. It is then sought for in the sand in the box and examined closely as to condition.

Of course the shell is not charged, or it would explode and blow up the box and all around after going through the steel. Not all the shells fired at the steel armor plate go through it, and this is considered sufficient cause for condemnation of that batch of projectiles. The experiments are all conducted by the Cramps' regular staff of ordnance

THE SAND CURE FOR DYSPEPSIA.
A new remedy for dyspepsia and stomach trouble has made its appearance in southern Oregon. It is nothing less than a spoonful of common, every-day, river-bottom sand, taken wet, just after meals. William Bybee, a well-known citizen, and proprietor of By-bee's springs, is supposed to be the originator of the queer remedy, but quites a number of veracious gentlemen testify to its curative properties, which are supposed to take the form of mechanical action by carrying off impurities from the mucous lining of the walls of the stomach. "Take sand" is quite a popular piece of advice around Ashland when any one complains of chronic stomach trouble. As there is no patent on the sand, that commodity being within the reach of the poorest of us, this article cannot be called a patent-medicine advertisement.—Grant's Pass Courier.
